5 Ideas for Making Time to Pray for Your Children

Praying Scripture out loud over your family is your biggest weapon against the enemy of discouragement, sickness, worry, protection and favor.

Though we know that we are called to pray continually (1 Thessalonians 5:17), our busy schedules and the growing demands of parenthood require our prayers to be quick and done on the go. Here are five ideas for you to try to incorporate quick and powerful prayers for your children.

1. Drive-through prayer.

We have drive-through banks, restaurants, and pharmacies. Why not drive-through prayer? When you drive through your neighborhood, past schools and friends' homes, you can pray for kids and their families. Or praying in the car on the way to school or to places creates an atmosphere of discussion, prayer habit and blessing over your family.

Think about it: even though the time spent praying every time you drop your child off at school may be less than a minute, if you pray several times a week over the course of several years, that amounts to a lot of prayer!

2. Write it down.

Like grocery shopping without a list, you will likely have a hard time remembering what to pray about without writing it down. The hustle and bustle of parenting may make it easy to forget about specific things to pray about for your kids.

In addition to writing it down as a list, add specific prayers with a verse to claim the Lord's promise.

Try to keep a notebook or use a note app on your phone to remind yourself of how you can specifically pray for your kids' needs. There are also many apps that allow you to record yourself and even transcribe your words that make it easy to quickly jot down specific prayers throughout the day. Then at the end of the day, you can pull out these prayer notes.

3. Pray with friends.

Committing to pray with friends with children can be a great source of motivation and accountability. Commitments with friends— "I'll pray for your kids if you'll pray for mine"—have motivated me.

Find friends with children with whom you can make a commitment— "I'll pray for your kids if you'll pray for mine." You can agree to pray for a particular length of time, such as a school year or sport season. Knowing that your friend is counting on you can encourage you to keep praying.
